STABBING IN TAFT CROWD

MAN RAYONETED AS PRESIDENT INTERS FAIR GROUNDS.

Re cives Thrust of a Militiaman Trying to keep a Turbulent Dallas Mob in Order Boys in Gray Warm to Their Visitor-Good-by to Texas Is Said.

DALLAS, Tex., Oct. 23 .- As President Taft was entering the fair grounds this afternoon a man was bayoneted by one of the militia guards. His death is expected.

This was only one of several incidents in the Dallas reception that made it the most turbulent the President has received on his Western trip.

It seemed as if a large part of the population of Texas had emptied itself into Dallas for a riproaring time, with the President of the United States as a side attraction

There were sheriffs, deputy sheriffs Young militiamen were stationed at intervals on foot. The crowd got even with the horsemen by throwing apples and other things at them.

After the President had reached the speakers' stand it was five minutes before the committee could bring the crowd to a semblance of order The President's much disturbance that he could scarcely be heard fifteen feet from the stand.

The man stabbed with the bayonet was Louis Reichenstein, a deputy county clerk. Militiaman J. D. Manley's blade ran completely through his body, piercing his stomach. Presumably the clerk was trying to get through the line, although he was inside the rope when stabbed. The militiaman who made the thrust is a sergeant in a Dallas company.

Reichenstein belonged to a well known family here and has been in local politics for a good many years. His friends are greatly worked up over the stabbing and are making threats against Sergt. Manley. The sergeant was arrested and locked up on a charge of assault. He declined to make any statement beyond saying that he had done his duty.

A good many women saw the man fall and the excitement for a few minutes swept away the police lines.

At the Oriental Hotel after the fair grounds meeting the President got caught n a crowd and had to elbow through it. In the evening the President attended a banquet here

His stop at Dallas ends his week's stay in Texas and to-morrow morning he will eave for St. Louis, where he will board a United States revenue cutter on Monday and start on his trip down the Mississippi River.

The most striking feature of the President sent's long stay in Texas has been the active part taken in the receptions by Confederate veterans and by Confederate organizations generally in San Antonio the President found the wearers of the Blue and the Gray drawn up shoufter to shoulder before the speakers' stand at the historic Alamo. In Corpus Christi the President himself brought the old soldiers of the North and the South together when he asked those in the front rows to give up their seats so that the veterans might have the place of honor

To-day in Dallas also the old boys of both armies took part in the programme, but the climax came earlier in the day at Houston, when the Confederate colors were pinned to the lapel of the President's coat by a Daughter of the Confederacy while an audience of 10,000 cheered.

The President went through the most of the day wearing the insignia, and everywhere he was greeted with a warmth that bespoke a feeling deeper than mere reverence for the office or regard for the

Miss Kate Daffan, president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. was the woman selected to decorate the President at Houston. The President was standing on the first floor balcony of the Rice Hotel looking down into the faces of thousands. Mayor Rice introduced Miss Daffan, and as she stepped forward the crowd cheered wildly. Paughter welcomed Mr. Taft on behalf of the women of Houston and assured him of their confidence.

"To have the welcome of the men of Houston is worth much," said the President, "but to be assured the confidence and the cordial reception of those who really govern Houston is worth very much

"We are, my friends, a united country." the President added. "I accept this recognition kindly offered by the Daughters of the Confederacy, an association organized to perpetuate the memories of the heroism of the men who died and offered in a cause in which they sincerely elieved, and we now have as a common heritage the heroism of both sides, conscious that each side could have overcome any other opponent in much less time than the war lasted." Later on in his Houston speech the President said with a good deal of feeling: Men of the South, I thank you for your cordial welcome. I don't care what your politics are. I remember they told that he had more friends and got fewer is attached to the main shaft and while votes in Texas than in any other State. Well, if we can preserve the friendship we can wait for the votes. We don't require ing frame are attached two subsidiary hem provided politics are forgotten and propellers which while performing the we are all united as we are and as I know we are from such demonstrations as this repeated all over the State, united in one sentiment for a common country and a

Mr. Taft taxed his imagination to pic-

"I confess," he said, "that as I look for ward to the construction of the Panama Canal and the settlement of Texas by people of the East and North, the size of this State, its growth, its products, its power become stupendous in the imagination, and I can't find a single Texan. although he may be a candidate for the United States Senate and I suppose they all are who is willing to part with a single foot of Texas. That kind of State pride is worth having and speaks well for the history of your State."

As the President was leaving the hotel balcony at Houston he bumped his head against a window. He stopped and rubbed his head, while the reception committee crowded around asking if he were

"Not much," said the President, but he continued to rub the spot for several seconds

The President strained his voice in trying to make himself heard from the Houson Hotel balcony and when he reached Dallas it was in worse shape than it has and Texas Rangers' who rode along the been at any time on the trip. His physilines trying to keep the crowd in check. cian urged him to refrain from speaking at the half dozen brief stops between Houston and Dallas, but the President insisted on saying a few words at all except one stop. He let Secretary of War Dickinson in on the speechmaking there as an understudy.

The Secretary told the Texans of the row that Davy Crockett had with the Tennessee Legislature and how he finally had said: "I'm going to Texas; you can go voice was very husky and there was so to hell." The Secretary in his enthusiasm later said Tennessee two or three times when he meant Texas.

"Say," shouted a man in the crowd. "hadn't you better come back to Texas like Davy did?"

At College Station the President found everal hundred students from the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College drawn up, and at Hempstead he addressed the negro students from the Prairie View School. Hempstead is known among Texans as "Six Shooter Junction." was there that Congressman Pinkney and several others were shot down at a law and order meeting in the court house a few years ago.

"Where is Hempstead in Texas, in the south or east or centre of the State, or where?" asked the President of the crowd. "Why," sang out one man, "it's in Walter of course," which information county. seemed to be perfectly satisfactory to the President.

At Hempstead the possum gift was perpetrated again. This is the third ossum the President has received since he hit Texas, and if this is an indication of what is to come from the real possum States of the South it is about time for the hunters to organize.

Mr. Taft is turning the animals loose as fast as he gets them, and there ought to be a fat find for anybody who will follow along the Taft trail from New Orleans to the Atlantic seaboard.

METEORITE, THEY SAY.

Fiery Ball of Something Hits a House and Wakes Up Storrs, Conn.

STORRS, Conn., Oct. 23 .- What is believed to have been a meteorite awakened every one in this village at 1 o'clock this morning. There was a terrific crash. Windows were smashed and clocks stopped in several buildings.

The telephone pole in front of the home of F. M. Chadwick was splintered in fine pieces and a large hole was made in the ground. A piece of the meteorite struck to Harvard because there was a pack of a large elm, splintering the bark of the girls there. Another man told me right tree. The home of F. M. BALLOON 105 FEET LONG

Now Being Inflated at Morris Park Try a Long Flight.

Joel T. Rice and John A. Riggs of Little Rock. Ark., have put the finishing touches on the largest dirigible balloon ever built in this country at Morris Park. Yesterday the inflation of the 105 foot envelope was begun. It is expected that the big craft will be ready to get into the air within the next few days. The inventors propose to circle the skyscrapers of New fork with their airship, and subsequently by successive stages to reach Washington. D. C., and thence make a Southern tour by the aerial route.

The 87 foot frame is constructed of hollow steel rods and weighs 450 pounds. being the only frame of this type ever built in America. The weight of the entire apparatus when inflated is 1,000 pounds. It is designed to carry three passengers Several new features have been introduced in the method of control. Instead of using Roosevelt when he came down here a rear rudder a large propeller in front supplying propelling power also acts as a rudder. On either side of the projectoffice of pullers are connected with the erank shaft in such a way as to depress or elevate the balloon. The owners believe they can make rips of almost 100 miles.

MISS MILHOLLAND WILL STUDY LAW AND NOT TALK.

Tells of Her Pailure to Enter Harvard She's Tackling Columbia Now, but May Have to Go to N. Y. U .- Off to Vassar to See How the Cause Progresses.

Miss Inez Milholland, who used to preach the Cause of Woman to the Vassar from the total debt of all revenue bonds girls and to explain to them what socialism really meant, has announced five years or more after the taxes against her intention of temporarily retiring from which they were levied become due. the limelight.

"I am going to keep out of the public eye as much as possible during the next interest and the amortization of the city's two years," she said yesterday afternoon debt; also all cash in the sinking fund in a farewell interview at the Hotel Man- and cash in those funds against hattan, "and devote myself to the study of law.

"But I thought you weren't admitted to Harvard," ventured some one in a deprecating tone.

"That is true," admitted Miss Milholland. "But there are other law schools It is of course, as I told the Harvard faculty, a great disappointment to me that I cannot go to the school which is admitted to offer the greatest advantages to students, but mere disappointment is not sufficient to turn me aside from a seriously formed purpose.

"I do not feel," she continued, "that the time I spent in Boston endeavoring to make arrangements to enter Harvard was wasted, even though I did not gain my desire I have at least made prominent educators and lawyers think seriously over the discriminations which are made to a woman as the train left the 135th against women in leading universities and I succeeded in convincing many of them that it was both foolish and unjust. Many of the most prominent lawvers of Boston wrote letters to the Harvard faculty on my behalf after I had seen them and explained my case to them, and the faculty voted to admit me Everything would have been all right had it not been for the attitude of the board of trustees. Only two of them voted in my favor, but persons who have lived in Cambridge all their lives told me that I had achieved a great victory."

Miss Milholland could not be persuaded to give the names of the trustees who had espoused her cause. "I don't want to seem to criticise those that voted against me," she explained. "They said that the reason they could not do as I wished had nothing whatever to do with any ideas as to the inferior mental capacity of women, but was merely a question of policy. They seemed to think school would in the minds of the parents of the men students prove a distracting influence, and that it would keep away whip did not approve of coeds One of them went so far as to say that he feared it would lower the tone of their clientele. I did my best to show them that the higher education of women and the part they are beginning to take in the work of the world must eventually break down all these old fashioned prejudices and that I was giving Harvard a good opportunity to take the lead in the progressive movement "One man shook his head and said that be sure to say that they didn't want to go that all courses in all universities would eventually be open to women, but added that he certainly didn't want Harvard to take the lead in any such innovation. He said that he absolutely abhorred the entrance of women into public life and into men's occupations and professions and

"What law school do you intend to enter?" she was asked

"I haven't quite decided yet." she replied I am now corresponding with different which does not, as you know, admit women to its law school, and I have some hope modify their rules in my behalf. If they do not I think I shall take the course at New York University. Many of our best women lawyers have been graduated from there, and I am sure I should enjoy the work very much."

"Are you going to give up suffrage?" asked the interviewers.

"Oh, no, indeed," was the reply. of my reasons for studying law is that I am sure that women need a knowledge of law and of the Constitution before they can expect to do intelligent political work My other reason is that I wish to be selfsupporting. Of course it isn't necessary that I should be, but as a matter of selfrespect I do not wish to be catalogued in the parasite class. It is my intention to preserve my affiliation with the Equality League of Self-Supporting Women and also with Mrs. Pankhurst's league. She is a wonderful woman, a perfect genius." added Miss Milholland, "and I am devoted to Christabel. I think she is such a beauty, and her enthusiasm for the cause would inspire any one to work for it.

"Inez! Inez!" chorused several voices from the next room at this point. the future forensic orator excused herself hastily and disappeared. She returned almost immediately after a whispered conference punctuated by subdued giggles.

"I am sorry," she said, "but I can't talk any more just now, for I have to the 7:15 train for Poughkeepsie, and the girls who are waiting for me are afraid we'll be late."

"Are you going up to a suffrage meeting or a meeting of the Socialist Club?" asked her listeners, rising to go.
"Well," she admitted, "I am going up to see how the suffrage work is progressing. I took a great interest in it when I was at college, and when I left last June I placed it in charge of some of the strongest and most prominent girls I am anxious to see how it has developed for often the first few weeks of college make or break an enterprise. The reports I hear are very encouraging and I am looking forward to a delightful re-

CITY MARGIN OF $90,000,000. Comptroller's Office Will Give the Exact

In a statement issued yesterday from the Comptroller's office it was computed that as a result of the decision of the Court of Appeals on the debt limit question the city now has a borrowing capacity of more than $90,000,000. The Metz state

"The changes that will now have to te made in the city's method of calculating the debt will include a deduction outstanding, excepting those outstanding Special revenue bonds must now deducted; also an instalment placed in the budget each year to provide for which contracts are not registered; also bonds payable in any year, provision for which must be made in the budget, and the cash holdings of the sinking fund. As these amounts were never deducted from the total debt in ascertaining what the city's debt was, within the meaning of the Constitution, the bookkeeping methods in the Department of Finance will now be arranged so that these items can be ascertained upon very short notice Until that is done we cannot tell the city's exact borrowing capacity, although it is safe to say that at the present time it exceeds $90,000,000."

At sight of the badge the man jumped up, hit Strauss in the face and-ran into a rear car. Strauss followed and was again attacked. He was being badly worsted in the fight when the train pulled into the 149th street station and two passengers helped Strauss to pull his assail ant from the car.

DELAWARE SWIFT ENOUGH. Our Biggest Battleship Easily Exceeds 21 Knots, Her Contract Rate.

ROCKLAND, Me., Oct. 23 .- The battleship Delaware, the largest American fighting craft ever constructed, easily exceeded her contract requirement of 21 knots an hour in her final standardization tests off Owl's Head to-day. Her engines pushed the mass of steel along at an average speed of 21.44 knots an hour for five runs over the measured course. Once she covered a mile at the rate of 21.98 knots, but this speed is subject to tidal corrections.

The engines developed in excess of 30,000 horse-power. There were three runs at and five at maximum speed, during which the big boat established a world's record for her class.

As soon as the standardization runs were completed the battleship put to sea for her four hour endurance run. Following this she will have a series of fuel and water tests, during which oil will be burned under the boilers a portion of the time. She will have two twenty-four hour runs, the first at a speed of 19 knots an hour and the second at 12 knots speed.

BRITAIN LAUGHING NOW AT DR. BODE'S VINCI FIND.

Much Advertised Purchase for Germany Turns Out to Be of Home Manufacture; Date. 1846-Put On 350 Years of Dilapidation in Tower of the Winds.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. London, Oct. 23. -Some curious stories of traffic in the old masters and antique objects of art have been told in the last few years, but there is nothing to match the discomfiture of an expert whose self-desortion was exposed to-day. It was announced a fortnight ago that Dr. Bode, the well known curator of the

Kaiser Friedrich Museum at Berlin, had visited London and purchased for many thousand pounds a life size wax bust of a woman which he declared to be of fifteenth century workmanship and almost certainly the production of Leonardo da Vinci himself. The Times described the bust as a work in an excellent state of preservation, but he had left the French Republic likewise the body had suffered a good deal. The Times also had severe things to say about

English blindness to real artistic treasures.

"The recent history of the bust," said

connoisseurship. "It came up for sale near Southampton a year or two ago and brought not more than two or three pounds, or, as some say, under a sovereign. Passing through various hands, it rested in those of a dealer in King street, who sold it for about £150 to Murray Marks, who was obliged to keep it for himself because his partners declined the purchase. "Afterward our own museum authorities might have bought it, but nothing was done and Dr. Bode finally secured it for Berlin at a price of a good many thousands. It will soon be exhibited and every art publication on the Continent will discuss and illustrate it."

The latter prophecy proved correct, with the result that we know to-day all about this wonderful work of art from the day of its creation. Its history is told by Charles Cooksey, the well known auctioneer of Southampton, and it is fully substantiated. It is the work of Richard Cockle Lucas, who was a sculptor of some prominence in London in 1846. Lucas was a protégé of Lord Palmerston, and nany of his carvings in ivory are now in the Kensington Museum.

An art dealer named Buchanan brought to Lucas one day a reputed picture by Vinci representing a half length portrait of a lady scantily draped, holding in her right hand sprays of flowers and in her left loosely holding some drapery flowing from he right shoulder across the lower part of the body. Buchanan asked Lucas if he would reproduce the subject as a wax The artist accepted the commisbust. The sculptor's son, Albert Durer Lucas, also reproduced the picture in

The forearms of the figure are gone, and it is also much dilapidated owing to its exposure to the weather for years in the garden. It does not follow that Dr. Bode's opinion as to the antiquity of his treasure is in any way altered by these interesting revelations. His dictum in the realm of art once spoken is seldom shaken by outside evidence.

Married Her-She Became Frightened

and Fled After Attempting Suicid

A sixteen-year-old girl, pretty and in peck of trouble, told a remarkable story to Magistrate Butts in the West Side police court yesterday. Her name used to be Ethel Simms, and up to a little while ago she lived in Wilmington, Del. She told the Magistrate that her husband, Harry Mason of 266 West Thirty-ninth street, had made her marry him against her will.

This is substantially what she told: "I came to New York four weeks ago. My father is a business man in Philadelphia, but I don't see him very often because I used to live with my grandfather in Wilmington. My mother is dead. My grandfather's name is Dr. John H. Simms and he lives at 613 French street. Wilmington. I had an uncle who was a Judge in Wilmington. His name is Judge James Joslyn.

"I left Wilmington because I wanted o go on the stage, and I thought New York was the place to come to. Yes, I got a place in a company. I answered an advertisement in a newspaper and I've een rehearsing for quite a while in Nutral Hall on Ninth avenue somewhere near Forty-second street. It was a buresque company, I think.

"Last Tuesday I met Jimmie—that is the name I knew him by. I was walking through Thirty-ninth street and I saw him standing on the stoop at 266 Wes Thirty-ninth street. He called to me and stopped. He asked me if I was looking for a job, a good job as a show girl. I told him yes. He asked me if I wou please come up stairs, so I went. Jimmie had a six room apartment. I stayed a little while and then I went away. I told him I would come back again the next afternoon. I think I must have fallen in love with Jimmie at first sight.

"I did just as I said I'd do. When I went back again to Jimmy's rooms he showed me some pipes to smoke opium with. He asked me if I wouldn't try it. I did, and it made me so sick that I had to stay there all that night. When I woke up in the morning I was still very sick. When I tried to get out I found th door was locked.

The police say that when Ethel found the door locked she turned on the gas and that Mason got back just in time to let in enough fresh air to save the girl's life. Ethel herself wouldn't say anything about that yesterday. "Jimmie came back after a while. I think it must have been afternoon." she continued. "He said he wanted to marry me right away. I told him I wanted some time to think it over, but he threaten me so that I went with him down to the City Hall. He did all the question answering himself. He told them I was 19 years old and that my name was Ethel Ross Gilmore. Alderman Goldschmidt married us. I remember his name. "When we got back again to Jimmie's laid down and fell asleep. After a while heard some voices. One was Jimmie's and he was talking to another man. "I heard Jimmie ask: 'What do you think of her?' I kept my eyes tight shut apartment I was still pretty sick, so I so that they wouldn't know I had waked up.

"The other man said: 'Oh, she's pretty enough. She ought to get in the cash all right. She'll do.' Then they went out of the room. "It all frightened me a lot. After a time I told Jimmie I wouldn't stay with him. He swore and beat me. So I staved.

"The next day-that was Friday-he took my ruby ring. He said he was going to pawn it. He went out, and when he was gone some time I slipped out too. I found two men and told them about it The men were vaudeville actors, Harry

Duffy and David Porter They both live at 270 West Thirty-ninth street. They took the girl to a traffic squad policemen who went back with her and arrested Mason when he returned at about to o'clock. Quilty, the policeman, says be found the opium layout that the girl spoke of. Mason is 23 years old. When Mason was brought before Magie trate Butts, Detective Mulholland of the Headquarters force, said that he was wanted in San Francisco in connection with a Wells Fargo Express Company robbery. Magistrate Butts held M in $2,000 bail for examination to-day in order that Alderman Goldschmidt might have a chance to tell what he knew of the

The Alderman, who lives at 166 East Ninety-sixth street, told a reporter yeaterday that he had married the coup but that the girl had told him she was 19 years old. The license gave that as her age. "As a matter of fact," sai he, "she showed a good deal more selfpossession than the young man." Word received last night from Wilmings
